

Operation Allies Welcome - HUD Programs & Resources

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) provides funding to state and local governments, nonprofit organizations, and other housing partners to help individuals and families in the United States find safe, stable, and affordable housing. Funding is limited and not everyone can be assisted. Some programs have waiting lists or other special criteria. If your clients need help with housing, we encourage you to use the table and links below to find out about housing and related assistance they may be able to receive. Help will depend on their immigration status; their income level or other eligibility criteria; and availability of the housing or assistance in the area. HUD funds these programs but does not directly administer them, so HUD does not handle or accept applications for assistance or screen applicants. The agency relies on local public housing agencies, private landlords, and local governments to administer the programs following HUD's guidelines.

HUD's Housing Counseling Program can also assist individuals and families with searching for, obtaining, and maintaining a home, whether it be renting or owning. To find a HUD-approved housing counseling agency in your local area, call (800) 569-4287, or use the online search at www.hud.gov/housingcounseling. HUD-certified housing counselors are trained to assess an individual's financial situation, explain the housing options available, and help with accessing the resources and programs available.

Providers should help individuals regardless of what language they speak. It is illegal to discriminate against someone based on race, color, national origin, religion, sex (including gender identity or sexual orientation), familial status, or disability when they are trying to rent or buy a home, get a mortgage, seek housing assistance, or engage in other housing-related activities. Rental Assistance and Low-Rent Housing

The HUD programs listed below provide rental assistance and low-rent housing to low- and moderate-income individuals and families. To access these programs, you must meet certain program criteria and you must be a U.S. citizen/national or have an eligible immigration status. For some HUD programs, such as public housing and Section 8, households with U.S. citizens and people with other immigration statuses (called "mixed-status families") may also be eligible for assistance.

The chart below provides a list of immigration statuses that are eligible for the HUD programs mentioned in this resource. The following is not a complete list of eligible immigration statuses to access HUD programs. If you have questions about eligibility based on immigration status, contact the housing provider.

Assistance Necessary to Protect Life or Safety

Some programs are available to people no matter what their immigration status is. Non-cash assistance and services funded by the below HUD programs are available to individuals and families regardless of immigration status because they are considered “necessary to protect life or safety.” This is true as long as the regulations of the program do not require the provider to provide the assistance based on your income or resources. These programs are open to all people regardless of the language you speak. Examples of such assistance and services include:

- Emergency shelter;^{xix}
- Street Outreach Services;^{xx}
- Safe Haven;^{xxi}
- Rapid Re-housing;^{xxii}
- Transitional housing funded by the federal government (for example, HUD, Office on Violence Against Women (OVW), Office for Victims of Crime (OVC), Department of Health and Human Services (HHS)) where the transitional housing program is not required by regulation to provide the rental assistance payments based on the program participant’s income;^{xxiii}
- Short-term housing assistance for people experiencing homelessness or survivors of domestic violence, sexual assault, or human trafficking, or for runaway, abused, or abandoned children;
- Short-term, non-cash, emergency disaster relief;
- Crisis counseling and intervention programs;
- Services and assistance relating to child protection, adult protective services, violence and abuse prevention, victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, human trafficking, or other criminal activity; or treatment of mental illness or substance abuse;

- Programs, services, or assistance to help individuals during periods of heat, cold, or other adverse weather conditions; and
- Soup kitchens, community food banks, senior nutrition programs such as meals on wheels, and other such community nutritional services for persons requiring special assistance.
