A Message from the Regional Administrator

Opportunities for Residents & Renewal

When was the last time you were in Erie, Pennsylvania? Seriously. I am guessing it has been a while—or maybe you have never been. It isn’t exactly a standard vacation destination. But, as we all look for potential drivable road trips throughout the Mid-Atlantic, you may want to consider a visit. Because the work the City of Erie, Erie Regional Chamber and Growth Partnership and the Erie Downtown Development Corporation (EDDC) are leading in the city’s eight Opportunity Zones is nothing short of amazing. You might say they are bringing the “great” back to this Great Lakes Shore town.

Last week, EDDC’s Chief Executive Officer John Persinger gave a tour and update on progress being made in revitalizing the city’s downtown core. Joining me, Deputy Regional Administrator Jane Miller and Pittsburgh Field Office Director Michael Horvath were senior leaders from the Department of Agriculture-Rural Development and Small Business Administration. The visit was part of a three-day swing through western Pennsylvania to meet with officials and stakeholders in Mercer, Erie, Warren and Venango Counties.

This is my third trip to Erie and each time I return, I see why the White House Opportunity and Revitalization Council: Best Practices Report to the President noted the City of Erie “has set a strong example with its Opportunity Zone efforts.” In addition to the great work they are doing to create jobs and bring back economic prosperity to their city, they produced the White House Reinvestment Roadmap, which among other things, identifies available Federal grant opportunities, and builds on the City of Erie Investment Prospectus—cited in the report as the first municipal-level prospectus designed to market a jurisdiction to Opportunity Zone investors. All three documents are worth a read.

While Opportunity Zones are not a “program” per se, we believe the Zones are an additional resource to drive economic development, which, in turn has a positive impact on the communities and people that we serve. And here in Region III, we are home to more than our share of great examples of both. In the Best Practices Report, you’ll find 33 projects underway in our region alone that are creating jobs, training local workers and adding affordable housing where it is needed most—and that’s in addition to all of HUD’s programs underway to help residents become economically self-sufficient.

One of the initiatives highlighted in the report is Second Chances Farm (SCF) in Wilmington, Delaware. With founder Ajit George, I had the pleasure of hosting a tour and roundtable discussion with HUD Secretary Ben Carson and Attorney General William Barr with members of the SCF leadership team and returning citizens.

As the first commercial, indoor, hydroponic, vertical farm in Delaware and one of the leading Smart Farms in the United States, Second Chances Farm hires people who were formerly incarcerated in federal or state prisons and provides them with mentorship and green-collar jobs. During the visit Secretary Carson said, “Second Chances Farm is a shining example of the kind of innovative thinking that we’re seeing pop up in Opportunity Zones across this entire Nation.” To join us virtually for the tour with the Secretary, click here.

And there was more good news to share that day. Second Chances Farm signed an agreement with developer Michael Bailkin to open a second farm in Philadelphia. Managed and staffed by the SCF Delaware team, Second Chances Farm Philadelphia is slated to open in late 2021. Plans are to use Philadelphia as a headquarters site, while opening satellite farms in “older industrial cities” throughout Pennsylvania in areas like Scranton, Coatesville and Norristown.

“The most important consideration will be on creating opportunities for returning citizens,” noted George following the announcement. “The second target of the partnership is to provide healthy food for areas that are food deserts, which most of these opportunities are, and the third is economic development, which is what Michael brings to the table.”

As Mid-Atlantic Regional Administrator, I am charged with spearheading the Department’s Opportunity Zone outreach activities by hosting roundtables, meetings and events to increase awareness, educate stakeholders and provide technical assistance. It was through one of those meetings I met Ajit, and another that led to his introduction to Michael.

It’s an aspect of this job that I really enjoy. So, if you have work underway that you’d like to showcase in an Opportunity Zone near you, just give me a call. I’d love to come for a visit.

First State Offers Housing Assistance for Renters & Homeowners
To assist Delawareans facing financial hardships as a result of the COVID-19 health crisis, Governor John Carney and Delaware State Housing Authority (DSHA) Director Anas Ben Addi launched a program to provide emergency housing assistance to renters affected by shutdowns, closures, layoffs, reduced work hours, or unpaid leave. The Delaware Housing Assistance Program (DE HAP) initially provided eligible households up to $1,500 in assistance, with payments made directly to the property owner or utility company. The first round announced in late March assisted 1,224 households totaling about $2.2 million in rent payments. After the program was relaunched in August 2020 with a new online application portal and up to $5,000 in emergency housing assistance, 850 applicants with a total rent deficiency of nearly $3 million qualified for help. DSHA is also providing emergency housing assistance to homeowners affected by the pandemic through the Delaware Emergency Mortgage Assistance Program (DEMAP). Eligible homeowners can apply for up to $5,000 per household, paid directly to the mortgage servicer. To date, nearly 80 First State homeowners have applied for the program with close to $400,000 in assistance requested. DSHA is working closely with several HUD-approved housing counseling agencies throughout the state who will help guide...

Getting Work, Virtually
During this pandemic, many of us have learned new ways of working and getting work done. And, for the District of Columbia Housing Authority’s EnVision Center team, the agency has even perfected the art of “getting work” through a series of Virtual Hiring & Resource Fairs. By partnering with Maximus, a health and human services provider that supports their EnVision Center, Workforce Development Initiative and Family Self-Sufficiency (FSS) programs, DCHA has provided more than 150 participants with new options for training and employment. The six virtual hiring events have attracted employers including District of Columbia Public Schools (DCPS), Giant Foods, Securitas and Didlake; Allied Security and Allied Universal; Fairfax County Schools, First Transit and more. One virtual event provided FSS program participants with tips on being job ready as well as how to improve their credit. “We like the virtual hiring fair,” stated DCPS’ Early Childhood Education School Support Coordinator Aaron Gray. “We were able to provide information to multiple people at the same time instead of the five minutes with one person in a traditional setting. Participating virtually allowed us to tap into a wider pool of new talent in the community, and we’re very appreciative of this opportunity to conduct outreach.” To learn more about upcoming virtual events, please contact Justin Cartagena at jcartagena@dchousing.org or call the DC EnVision Center at 202.645.5023.

DCHA Hosts Back 2 Business, a Small Business Administration Day Event
More than 30 potential entrepreneurs and small business owners attended the second Back 2 Business, a Small Business Administration Day event held in partnership with the District of Columbia Housing Authority. The event, presented virtually on September 25, featured resources and professional services that help business owners start and grow their businesses in D.C. All programs are available at no cost to residents. “DCHA and its EnVision Center are committed to creating platforms to provide opportunities and to help our residents achieve self-sufficiency,” said Brian K. Harris, director of the Office of Resident Services. “The services and resources provided in this session all help individuals hurdle barriers to entrepreneurship.” Panelists from the Departments of Consumer and Regulatory Affairs’ Small Business Resource Center, Small and Local Business Development’s Innovative & Equitable Development division, Latino Economic Development Center, Washington Area Community Investment Fund. Thinkbox’ Sustainable Communities Project, DCHA’s Property Management Operations and the Small Business Administration covered topics ranging from registering for a business license in D.C. to obtaining Small Business Administration loans. Each panelist listed what services they provide from career counseling, to grants, to how to become a D.C. government contractor and obtain marketing assistance. Public, private and nonprofit partners broke ground in Jessup, Md., on the $1 million Greenfields Community Living Project to bring nine units of affordable housing to Howard County. The new housing will provide a stable, decent home to extremely low-income persons who have been diagnosed with a psychiatric or developmental disability. Regional Administrator Joe DeFelice and Baltimore Field Office Director Carol Payne joined local partners for the special event. “Today’s groundbreaking is a testament to what we can achieve through public-private partnerships,” DeFelice said. “I’m proud more than $400,000 in HUD funding will help people with disabilities live independently in their community. As the nation continues to battle COVID-19, our focus will remain on protecting the most vulnerable communities and uplifting them in economic recovery.”

On August 28, Maryland’s first funding award through HUD’s Foster Youth to Independence (FYI) initiative was celebrated with Wicomico County Housing Authority Executive Director Don Bibb and local partners. Wicomico County’s first FYI voucher, totaling $7,786, is unique in that it not only involves a partnership among many agencies and nonprofits, but between two Eastern Shore counties, Wicomico and Somerset. That says a lot about those involved in assisting youth who are exiting foster care—they understand the importance housing plays in getting a good start in life. What is important about this announcement is not the money, it’s that the funding will provide housing assistance for one individual who is aging out of foster care and is at risk of experiencing homelessness. Amber Bass, Maryland’s first FYI voucher recipient, told those on-hand for the event just how having secure housing will help her in so many ways.

One-Year Anniversary of Foster Youth to Independence Initiative Commemorated
Secretary Ben Carson, Senator Pat Toomey, Regional Administrator Joe DeFelice and Allegheny County Housing Authority Executive Director Frank Aggazio commemorated the one-year anniversary of HUD’s Foster Youth to Independence (FYI) initiative in Pittsburgh, meeting with voucher recipients and local leaders about the program. “Think about yourself when you were 18, if somebody had just sort of put you out and said, ‘You’re on your own now,’” Carson said. “How would your life have gone? In many cases, it probably would not have gone very well at all.” Since the initiative launched last year, more than $500,000 in vouchers have been awarded in the Mid-Atlantic region to help young people aging out of foster care access stable housing. “I did not have the resources—I did not have the means to live on my own, especially coming out of foster care because I had no family,” Leibrynn Russell, an FYI voucher recipient, said. “I had no one to really support me or to lean on for finances, for education, for many different things. This program has helped me in getting the basic needs that I hadn’t met just with housing.”

Bringing New Affordable Housing to Philly
Archbishop Nelson Pérez of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, Catholic Housing and Community Services (CHCS) Director Heather Huot and many other partners and elected officials gathered August 10 for the groundbreaking of St. Rita Place and Cascia Center in South Philly. This new affordable senior housing community will open next fall with all the comforts of home, including on-site social services. HUD will provide $8.2 million in operating subsidy for the next 30 years to help 46 seniors age in place and live independently. The Department is playing a major role in bringing much-needed affordable housing to the city. The development is the realization of CHCS’s 10-year vision and will be its fifth senior residence in the city.

Bridging the Literacy Gap
For many public housing authorities in West Virginia, the summer of 2020 will be long remembered for the stress associated with COVID-19. Recognizing that children living in public housing would be at great risk of falling behind when schools closed in March, Alivia Sturgill, a rural education program specialist with Save the Children (STC), reached out to the West Virginia Association of Housing Authorities to form a partnership aimed at helping bridge the literacy gap. Coordinating what would become a statewide effort, Sturgill ultimately shared thousands of new children’s books and toys with local housing authorities. Valued at over $125,000, 10 housing authorities took advantage of these donations, enriching the lives of over 750 public housing children and their families. Sturgill also secured $50,000 in grant funds from STC to be awarded to housing authorities and nonprofits to encourage family engagement activities. Six housing authorities were awarded $1,000 STC mini grants, helping hundreds of children and families across West Virginia feel less isolated over the summer.

Federal Team Tours Opportunity Zones
A strong partnership has formed among federal agencies in the Mid-Atlantic region—one that’s steadily increasing the awareness and potential of Opportunity Zones across the region’s cities and towns. Taking a unified approach to outreach, the team is shedding light on federal programs and resources available to help communities move forward with their projects. The senior leaders are from the Department of Agriculture-Rural Development, Environmental Protection Agency and Small Business Administration. Over the summer, they traveled throughout western Pennsylvania, visiting Aliquippa, Erie, Franklin, McKeesport and New Castle, Oil City, Sharon and Warren. “We are building capacity to capitalize on Opportunity Zone investments and cutting impediments for cross-government collaboration,” said Regional Administrator Joe DeFelice.

Hardworking Nurse Honored as Resident of the Month
Ms. Krystal Sims didn’t let anything get in the way of achieving her goals. But that doesn’t mean it was always easy. On September 25, the City of Roanoke Redevelopment and Housing Authority (RRHA) honored Ms. Sims as the agency’s September Resident of the Month at The Villages at Lincoln. Krystal tackled her first goal of completing coursework to become a Certified Nursing Assistant (CNA). But she wanted more. Becoming a Licensed Practical Nurse (LPN) is next on her list. In November, Sims will celebrate a dual graduation. Not only will she finish her LPN courses at ECPI University, she’ll graduate from RRHA’s Family Self-Sufficiency Program—all while maintaining employment as a CNA, raising two children and giving birth to a third child. “Financial stability is a marathon, not a sprint. Everything that our residents accomplish, they are doing it themselves. That confidence moves with them, and it is the hope of RRHA that they will be able to pass this wealth—and knowledge—on to their children,” noted RRHA Executive Director David Bustamante. Krystal is the sixth resident of the month for The Village at Lincoln, one of eight public housing properties under RRHA’s management. Sponsors Jimmy Delgado and

In addition to his research, he has drafted a resident council guide and prepared a resident survey. By the end of the semester, FMHA anticipates hosting its first of many resident council meetings.

HUD PD&R Regional Reports
Region 3: Mid-Atlantic

By Wendy Ip | 2nd Quarter 2020

During the second quarter of 2020, the economy of the Mid-Atlantic region contracted for the first time since the Great Recession. Interventions to slow the spread of COVID-19 since mid-March 2020, including enforcing physical distancing and discouraging nonessential travel, caused economic activity in the region to decline dramatically. The gradual reopening of businesses in all states in the region and the District of Columbia during the second quarter of 2020 had a minimal positive impact on nonfarm payrolls in the Mid-Atlantic region, and jobs decreased at a faster pace than for the nation.

Agencies Unite to Offer COVID-19 Testing

In response to the coronavirus pandemic, the Charleston-Kanawha Housing Authority began collaborating with agencies to ensure the health and safety of its communities. Cabin Creek Health Systems has held multiple testing days on-site at housing communities, providing services to persons at their doorstep or at appropriate public spaces. This flexible approach has been very effective, catering to those who are at a higher risk or simply do not have transportation. At an event in July, 42 individuals were tested. The Community Garden at Orchard Manor made an ideal location, as it allowed for appropriate social distancing. When exiting, participants were given a meal and snack bag by Step By Step, Inc., which also offered information on educational programs for children. The United Way’s 211 program and the Charleston Area Medical Center’s Child Advocacy Center also provided on-site support.
